STATION & TELEGRAMS, HILDENBOROUGH.

10 July 1915.

FAIRHILL,

TONBRIDGE.

Dear Sir.

May I trouble you, as shortly as possible, with a comment?

A notice has, it appears, been given that long letters will be destroyed!

Such letters are not only extremely interesting to the recipient, but will be ~~so~~ quite invaluable as journals to the writer and to their descendants (consider the present value of a letter written by one's great-grandfather about ~~the~~ his share in the Waterloo Campaign!).

Granted that they may be too long for Censor's examination. That is clear. But in such a Case would it not be possible to delay delivery say for a month, or 3 mos or even the end of the war - any terms you like -

To destroy them is, it seems to me unnecessarily ruthless if you will pardon my saying so.

I remain Sir

Yours faithfully
Alfred J. Huxton
